ONE YEAR AFTER.

ONE TEAR AFTEN.

A year ago today the first sot of real war in the Russo-Japanese conflict took pileos, when at midnight on February 8, 1904, the Japanese torpoi-boars attacked the Russian squadron in the outer roads of Port Arbur. For twelve months the war has now been waged and the end as yot is, to all appearance, very far off. Meanwhills the whole world is aghast at the sapalling losses which this gaptant goods with the world and no one orpocoed that two great military and no one orpocoed that two great military

Powers, such as Russia and Japan, would meet in the shock of battle without there bome a terrible betcher's bill. The pride of both nations, the honor of both, are sungaged in this quarrel. Rassia had betieved the Tar East, as far as Manchuria was concerned, like a Colosaus, and a very hetering Colosaus to boot. She despised Japan and contemed her sodiers as a heat of yellow sagan dwarfs. Japan, on the other hand, paid Russia the better complinent of serious and prolonged preparation. She perfected her navy and her army as fighting machines; the spied out the joints in her rival's armour; she best all her energies and all her general and her army and her army as fighting machines; the spied out the joints in her rival's armour; she best all her energies and all her general the second of th
